

In his fourth and final collection of sermons, best-selling author Rabbi Sidney Greenberg offers a variety of compelling lessons that span his magnificent 54 years of service to the Jewish community. This wonderfully rich volume, published just months after his passing, showcases his most illuminating and insightful commentaries on a broad range of crucial issues. From the importance of Jewish identity and Israel, to the joys of family and congregation, to the very personal loss that touched his own household - Rabbi Greenberg brings his uniquely gentle voice to explore all aspects of the human condition. The author of more than 30 books, he uses literary characters, Biblical parables, and current events to bring Judaism, love, healing, and renewal into sharper focus. In Completing Life, Rabbi Greenberg explains that we need to let go in order to move on: Whatever our age, it is a time for us to grow - to become more capable of forgiveness, more sensitive to another's pain, more receptive to criticism, more open to a new idea. - from Completing Life. Cautioning us against holding grudges, Rabbi Greenberg urges: Too many of our angers are like inverted pyramids. They often rest on tiny, trivial incidents but they spread upward and outward until they fill our minds. - from Are There Any Corrections to the Minutes? Addressing the all-too-American fondness for materialism, he maintains that Happiness is not found in our possessions. It is found in how much we appreciate what we have. - from As We Think. Rabbi Greenberg underscores the importance of unconditional love: To love your child for his achievements is easy. To love him for his failures is to love him well. - from The Art of Failing. At the time of his death, Rabbi Greenberg was compiling his fourth anthology of sermons. In keeping with his wishes, Completing Life was lovingly assembled by his wife, Hilda. It's their gift to the world - one that will challenge you to re-examine your values, goals, and views of contemporary America.
