

Ryan is mad at his best friend Michael, who has not told him that his younger sister Katie has been home for a year from the army. He is very upset to see her sitting in a wheelchair, just a shadow of her former self when they all gather for a mutual friend's wedding. Being a doctor himself, Ryan is shocked to find out that Katie has isolated herself in her room, refuses to eat and is not being treated for post-traumatic stress caused by the loss of friends on the battlefield. Michael confides in him that he hasn't been able to help his sister, and since he will be out of town frequently on his job, will Ryan stop in to try to help her? Ryan agrees, but as he helps Katie the best way he knows how, he is tested to his limits and he reaches out to God for help. Unexpectedly, he no longer sees Katie as his friend's younger sister, but as a fully grown woman who he begins to fall in love with. He knows she appreciates his help, but does Katie feel the same way he does about her? He hasn't felt this vulnerable since his first wife passed away in a car accident on the west coast three years ago.
