Written by Dante Alighieri, an Italian politician, in the early fourteenth century, the Divine Comedy is a literary reaction to medieval Florence politics. The Divine Comedy is Dantes fictional portrayal of his own journey traveling through the three divine realms: Hell (Inferno), Purgatory (Purgatorio), and Heaven (Paradiso). Not surprisingly, Dante fills the Inferno, or Hell, with his enemies. The story of this poem is heavily populated with corrupt and sinful Florentine politicians. The Divine Comedy is the first Italian work of epic poetry that uses the vernacular, or the everyday language of the common Florentine people. Dante was instrumental in making the Italian language what it is today.
