At twenty-two, he has the entire world at his feet. With his father being Hank Kenzington, who is one of the best drivers in the Sprint Cup Series and his grandfather, Arnold Kenzington, a legend in Nascar, he's used to getting whatever he wants when he wants it. When he and his friends decide to spend the summer at his father's beach house in Myrtle Beach, he expects to spend it throwing parties on the beach and finding hot girls to hook up with. The last thing on his mind is finding a girl who'll make him re-think everything. Ashlynn Myers, along with a few sorority sisters, is heading to Myrtle Beach for four weeks of fun in the sun. The last thing she expects is to meet a guy while on vacation who will make her fall fast and hard before she even knows what hit her. When she meets Chase the chemistry between them is undeniable. The thing about summer and summer romances is that they both come with expiration dates. After summer ends you have to part ways and go back to your everyday lives. What do you do when you think you've found your soulmate but you're separated by hundreds of miles? Will Ashlynn and Chase be able to walk away from their summer fling and never look back, pretending that what they had for one month over the summer was nothing more than a hot summer hook-up? Excerpt: Just as we're making our way down the tall deck stairs that lead down to the driveway, we spot a group of guys climbing out of a speedboat that is now parked at a dock in front of the house next door. "Damn. Why am I not single?" I hear Nikki mumble as we all gawk at the three guys, who are wearing nothing but board shorts and flip-flops. They all have sunglasses on and beers inside koozies in their hands as they make their way up the beach towards the two-story house to the right of ours. I glance at their driveway and notice a yellow Suzuki crotch rocket and two other vehicles, a jacked up red Silverado, and a black Mustang convertible. "Well, we're single and definitely ready to mingle, right, Ashlynn?" Becca hints, elbowing me and giving me a cheeky grin. I just shake my head and let out a soft chuckle. They are definitely easy on the eyes. All three of them are very nicely toned and tan. If I had to guess, I'd say they're all around our age. The idea of partying with them makes this summer getaway look even better. "They're all hot. Do you think they had some type of interview process, ~Only good-looking dudes allowed in this bromance?" I definitely wouldn't kick any of them out of my bed," I say, laughing as I press the button on my keys, unlocking the doors of my Explorer. Just as we get about halfway down the stairs, the group of guys, who are laughing at something tall, tanned, and extremely good-looking just said, spot us four dorks staring at them. I think we all need a bib to catch the drool that's dribbling down our chins right now. They all flash us mega-watt smiles that sparkle in the slowly setting sunlight. This time of year, it stays daylight out until almost nine-thirty at night, so we have one more hour until the sky turns dark and the board walk of Myrtle Beach lights up. We all squeal and scurry down the stairs to my car just as the guys raise their hands and give us a small wave. "Welcome to Myrtle Beach, ladies!" the guy with shorter dark hair shouts across to us. The other two just wave and keep smiling. Just that alone has short circuited our brains.
