

In the final installment of Bettye Griffin's Love Will series (preceded by the prequel Lost That Lovin' and the novel Love Will Follow), Nylah Taylor has devoted herself to the care of her orphaned nephew, Dillon, since he was an infant. It's been a lonely four years, but she takes solace that he is happy and well-adjusted as he approaches his fifth birthday. When an innocent inquiry reveals someone has stolen Dillon's identity, Nylah immediately goes to the police station to report the crime. Detective Marc Samuels has to force himself to focus more on the legal issue of the beautiful woman before him and less on the woman herself. He presses her for information about Dillon that Nylah is reluctant to give, creating an antagonistic atmosphere. But he's determined to get into her good graces, for he believes that under that hostile exterior lies a woman in desperate need of some TLC and he also feels he's just the man to nurture Nylah.
