But as they go deeper into the jungle, Tomas begins to see familiar surroundings and his memories begin to return, revealing a strange and twisted life”and finally, his death as a human sacrifice. But why him?Before Mila and Tomas can uncover more, they are ambushed by the very same tribe that tried to drown him. They are taken to the priest as prisoners to await their fate....If you wish to read more, download now!BONUS PREVIEW IF YOU BUY THIS BOOK!EXCERPT”Tomas,” Mila whispered. She crept over to his hammock, where she could see him brooding about something. ”Tomas.”He looked at her, his eyes liquid pools of light in the night.”You must help out more, Tomas,” she said.”I remember more,” he whispered. ”I was pure.””What do you mean, Tomas?” Mila asked, almost crying with frustration. ”You don’t help us, you’re not making any sense””I was ready,” he said. ”I was trained”trained to drown, to accept the pain, to let the water inside me. I was pure. And yet”” He stopped.In the darkness, she felt his hand on hers. ”Tomas, you must stop this,” Mila pleaded. ”We can talk about this when we get back.””It doesn’t make sense,” he said. His grip on her hand tightened. He wasn’t listening to her. He was caught up in his memory again, the memory he once tried so hard to find and was now trying to escape. ”I was beaten almost every day, starved to the point of madness. And yet, they wouldn’t kill me. I had to be drowned but the snakes! they were there, they wouldn’t let me!””You’re not making any sense, Tomas,” Mila said. ”Please, stop.””I’m not making sense because nothing makes sense,” Tomas said, rolling up to a sitting position. ”Oh, Mila, I’m sorry. I don’t mean to scare you. But there were snakes in the cenote and they released me, and pulled me””It didn’t happen like that,” Mila hissed.”But it did,” Tomas said. ”Just like in Cancun.”Next in the Series:1.
