

Taken from Rebecca Tyrrels popular column in the Sunday Telegraph, these are a series of previously published pieces interlinked with small introductions to give the book a narrative structure. Funny, acerbic and infuriating at once, they are filled with familiar characters and themes such as the authors husband Matthew Normans medical neuroses, her son Louiss obsession with trains, her own imaginary shrink, George Sanders, who lives in the garden shed, etc. This collection will appeal to all fans of the column and provide the perfect present for those who need to be introduced to daily life in a neurotic West London household.
